Research in Spatial Humanities: the Japanese Occupation as an Example

Dr. Kwong Chi Man

Associate Professor and Department Chair, Department of History
Associate Director, Chinese, History, Religious and Philosophy Academy
Faculty of Arts and Social Sciences
Hong Kong Baptist University

This talk introduces the basics of Spatial Humanities, showing how Geographic Information Systems (GIS) can enhance humanities research. The speaker will outline how GIS tools help analyze and visualize data to study history from a spatial perspective. Potential benefits and challenges, such as data limitations and technical requirements, will be discussed. Attendees will gain an understanding of how GIS can offer new insights into humanities topics.
